Ethics and Boundaries for Social Workers

Choose to attend one of the programs to meet your continuing education requirement.

I. Advanced Issues and Practice

Monday, September 29, 2008; 8:30 am–12:30 pm; Fee: $95
0.4 CEU or 4 hours of professional continuing education

This four-hour program focuses on practical ethical issues commonly encountered in a variety of clinical situations including: foster care management, child abuse/neglect reporting, environments of excessive clinical workload, psychotherapeutic relationships, confidentiality, and financial conflicts of interest.

A variety of actual case examples illustrate ethical and boundary issues.

Here's what you learn

- The distinction between rule-based and value-based ethics
- A systematic method to analyze ethical problems
- How ethical predicaments reflect conflict in underlying values
- The dynamic interaction between personal ethics and institutional ethics
- A personal strategy to cope with ethical predicaments

Here's what others have said about Dr. Johnston's programs on ethics and boundaries:

"This is perhaps the best conference I have attended on ethics and morality. A lot of material was covered...without being dry!"

Allyson Mathews, psychotherapist
Medical Associates, Menomonee Falls, WI

"Very interesting! Held my interest and left me wanting more."

Jennifer Harders, social worker/case manager
Luther Manor, Wauwatosa, WI

"Very clear, practical, logical presentation with relevant examples and experiences."

Randy Dorece, social worker
Racine, WI

II. Cases of Standards and Emotions Colliding

Tuesday October 21, 2008; 8:30 am–12:30 pm; Fee: $95
0.4 CEU or 4 hours of professional continuing education

This four-hour program takes a problem-based learning approach to ethical education through careful examination of cases that present particularly difficult ethical challenges. Like all cognitive tasks, the ability to make skillful and appropriate ethical decisions improves with practice. The goal of this program is to provide you a comfortable opportunity to immerse yourself in the complexity of ethical problems facing today's mental health practitioner—conflicting needs, passionate emotions, colliding religious beliefs, and human frailties.

Case examples include

- Confidentiality issues involving teen sexuality/pregnancy, rights of spouses, and the elderly
- Professional misconduct and impaired professionals where there is moral or legal need to take action
- Fair and equitable distribution of donated organs requiring input from mental health practitioners
- Complex end-of-life and chronic-vegetative states entangled in mental health issues
- When religious beliefs are construed as mental health issues and conflict with usual standards of care

Your instructor

Hugh F. Johnston, MD, is clinical associate professor of psychiatry with the UW-Madison Medical School. He has extensive experience with ethical issues through membership on the university human subjects committee, his clinical work with abused/neglected children, and extensive forensic experience. Dr. Johnston's enthusiasm, clarity, and effective use of humor have earned him numerous teaching awards.
